Your support makes a difference!

Robin Persaud had lost his job, separated from his wife and children, and become homeless. Diagnosed with depression and a mood disorder, he had attempted suicide twice but couldn't afford the medication he needed to get well. Then he heard about the Canadian Mental Health Association (CMHA), a United Way funded agency. Robin credits CMHA with saving his life. Staff provided the resources and assistance that helped him obtain a source of income, find housing and, most importantly, stabilize his mental illness. Today at 39, Robin is healthy, his children have their father back, and he is filled with hope for a brighter future.
