More than 10 years ago Brian Koo had a stroke which paralysed his left side, leaving him bedridden and unable to speak.

After almost a year in the hospital, Brian came home and fell into a deep depression, spending his days sitting in front of the TV.

"I couldn't even bring myself to get dressed," he recalls.

A concerned friend brought Brian to CareFirst, a United Way funded agency that assists seniors in living healthy, socially active and independent lives. Now Brian, 66, is energized about life again. He attends luncheons, outings and especially enjoys the weekly Karaoke.

"After the stroke, I couldn't speak and the Karaoke helped me regain my voice," says Brian. "My spirits have been lifted and now I feel like I have a reason to get dressed in the morning."
