When 46 year old Carlos and his two sons were targeted by Columbian guerillas, he escaped to Canada looking for safety and a new beginning.

“It was difficult leaving my whole life behind, but I truly feared if I didn’t leave, my sons and I would be killed,” says Carlos.

After arriving in Peel, Carlos was referred to Catholic Cross Cultural Services (CCCS), a United Way funded agency. CCCS provides newcomers with services that help them settle and integrate successfully in Canada. CCCS connected Carlos and his sons with community resources that assisted with legal issues, ESL classes, housing and finding a school for his two boys.

“When I got here I didn’t know what to do or where to go,” says Carlos. “CCCS and United Way saved our lives.”
