Dadrien Brown immigrated to Canada in 2009. He felt like an outsider, he was homesick for his birth country and he was unsure of what he wanted to do with his life. An acquaintance referred him to African Community Services (ACS), a United Way funded agency. ACS's Youth Development Program and the Mentorship program helped Dadrien connect with the community while building his confidence and leadership skills.

"Now I have a sense of belonging and purpose," says Dadrien. "The staff at ACS gave my life stability and directed me to resources that assisted me in going back to school for upgrading and getting into University. They gave me a foundation to build my life on."

Dadrien is now in his second year at York University. This summer he is working with ACS as a Youth Coordinator Assistant. In his free time he enjoys singing and volunteering in the community.
